ESCAPE

As I concentrated all my thoughts on the science test, a slight movement by the window caught my eye. I tried not to let my eyes wander to see what had attracted my attention, but finally my curiosity got the better of me.

Everything appeared to be in its neat and proper order, relative to Mrs. Shaw's constant tidying of the room. Thinking nothing was out of the ordinary, I completed my test although something kept nagging at my consciousness.

To clear my head of the odd feeling, I returned my gaze to the window and drew in a cool breath of fresh air. As I did so, I sat transfixed; staring at the boa constrictor's cage. There was no boa!

I screamed! Everyone jumped and began firing questions. I was speechless and could only point. There was a wild frenzy to leave the room once the deadly truth sunk in. The boa's owner began a frantic search for his pet before anything drastic could happen.

Suddenly a triumphant cry rang out, "Here he is in Jennifer's tote bag!" Jennifer was quite unconscious on the floor!

- Cathy Zehr, 84

SAVAGES

Lockers are garbage disposals.
They swallow up students' books like hungry lions.
CRUNCH, CRUNCH, GULP!
The clean, crisp binders
are lost forever Settling down to the seemingly bottomless pit.

Will they ever be rescued?
Possibly today is the day
For the great locker cleanout?

Suddenly, there are footsteps
in the distance.
Closer,
closer,
closer they come.
Fingers jingle with the locks,
The doors fly open,
Out come the books,
Finally rescued!
Rescued from the bottomless
pit!

- Julia Humar, 84

SHRINKING

Our economy is shrinking.
From Argentina to Iran,
It seems like everyone is itching
To get a nuclear tan.

And our food supply is shrinking.
The water pipes are in decay.
But don't think of it as water,
It's more like soup of the day.

And our compassion is shrinking.
It's the ultimate crime.
We could save the starving millions,
But we can't seem to find the time.

- Andy Kuch, 74

"SHE'S LEAVING HOME. . ."

Why couldn't she understand our point of view?
She fled the room as soon as we told her.
We hoped she would think about it,
it means indirectly we care.
Oh, why can't she understand?
We didn't try to stop her,
we knew she'd probably leave it hurt us so to hear her flee.
We only want what's best for her,
we love her very much,
Someday she'll be a parent too.

- Heather Ernst, 84

A SOLEMN PLEDGE

Struggling up the mountain I was beginning to believe there was no summit. Then suddenly I found my eyes dancing across a great expanse of mountains. Tiny streams were trickling through the frequent spaces in between the large masses of rock. The air was cool and brisk. A slight mist was caused by a roaring waterfall which cascaded over a rocky ledge. I was now in another world. No longer was I in the busy city in which I had been living for many years. Though sad to leave I had to descend and return to the world from which I had come. But deep in my soul I vowed to return, conquer it once more. Then I would climb larger, more rewarding mountains. I took a quick glance behind me, which became one last and wonderful look. Then, reluctantly, I descended the mountain.

- Edwin Jager, 75

THE MAJESTIC PEGASUS

As I lay in my bed, I was struggling to stay awake. The open window let in a cool summer night's breeze. I walked to the window to see a picture perfect silhouette. Somewhere I heard the flutter of wings. Then all was silent again. A voice called out; a voice so indescribably beautiful; a voice I had heard only once before. Still again the voice called out. I scrambled down the cherry tree and let myself onto the wet grass. Suddenly the sky lit up revealing a white, majestic pegasus. I walked over to it, the voice still ringing in my ears. The beauty of this creature almost hypnotized me. It bowed on its front legs motioning me to climb on its back. I needed no reins as it was perfectly graceful. We went into flight somewhere, to a land it called its own.

- Jennie Puertges, 73

SMOKE, THE EVERLASTING DREAM?

Smoke is a dream,
drifting like an everlasting wish floating, flying, feeling
'till a breeze comes along and blows your dream far away.

- Annette Schulz, 84

INSIGHTS

As we stood around before our very first baseball practice, I began to speak to a friend. My attention was distracted by a girl who was walking in from the field. She was wearing a bright, baby blue sweater. I think that was what caught my eye at first. I don't quite understand exactly what it was, but there was also to be something deeper.

She had her arms crossed around her stomach and her head draped low. Her black hair was straight except for the small mixed curls dangling at the ends. She wore old navy cords which flared at the bottoms and tennis shoes.

As she came closer, a feeling rushed over me. It was almost an empty feeling over which I had no control. Now my attention was directed to her every move. She reached infield and picked out an empty spot for herself. She stood there and kicked the ground lightly with her one foot, balancing carefully on the other.

I just stood there in a transfixed stare. For a brief moment she lifted her head. Her dark blue eyes looked at me curiously and then her face took on an almost challenging stand. Once more her expression changed and I thought I saw a tear drip from those once challenging eyes before she again lowered her head.

My curious concentration was then interrupted by my friend's tap on my shoulder. She began to speak but I couldn't focus my attention on her words. Something hurt deep inside; something I still can't explain. Why did that solitary girl have such an effect on me?

- Christine Fendt, 83

BROTHER

I sometimes hate my brother,
He is a real bother,
Screaming and shouting,
And then there's pouting,
He eats everything in sight,
He could just blow up one night!

- Maria Alvarez, 76

YOUNG SENATOR YOUNG

Senator Young sat on the bench awaiting his turn to present his speech. He fidgeted, although he had determination written all over his face. His lips were tightly pursed and looked as though he would stop breathing any second. His steel jaw was set squarely. He shot a daggerlike, piercing glance from his ice cold eyes as he saw someone pointing an accusing finger at him. He set a striking pose with his perfect military cut. His unyielding brow deepened even further as he stood up and began to speak.

- Joanne Dowe, 83

REALITY

I can see over every mountain,
I can see over the highest tree,
I can see over every village,
Nothing is a mystery.

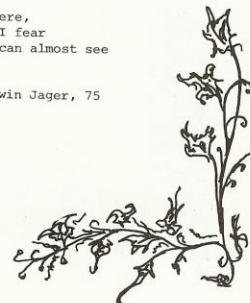

Climbing, climbing, higher, higher,
Drifting upward bound,
Past the moon and earth and stars,
Never touching ground.

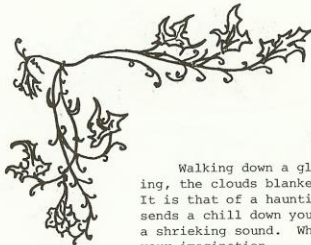

Dreaming, dreaming silently,
Everything is the way it should be.
Nothing's real, nothing's true,
I wonder if even the sky is blue.

Seems to last for days on end,
But only a few hours have passed.
Drifting back to our own atmosphere,
It makes me shed a solemn tear.

The end is almost here,
The dream is done, I fear
The end is here, I can almost see Reality.

- Edwin Jager, 75

WHEN THE MOON IS FULL

Walking down a gloomy country road at one o'clock in the morning, the clouds blanketing the moon slip aside to reveal its face. It is that of a haunting full moon. A pang of fear hits you and sends a chill down your spine. From somewhere behind you comes a shrieking sound. Whirling around, you face what you fear - your imagination.

You turn around and continue walking. Again you hear a noise; a harsh breathing and a growl. This time, it's not your imagination as you face a gleaming red eye.

You wake up to find yourself at home in bed staring at the "red eyes" of your digital alarm clock. You feel glazed with sweat and your heart is still racing. A vivid memory flashes through your mind. For some reason, you feel compelled to look out your window. Grey clouds drift by revealing the taunting face of the full moon.

- Mike Stever, 84

AFTERWARDS

Afterwards is when it hurts,
That's when the pain surfaces.
It's when friends turn to enemies.
When you need them the most
And all you can do,
Is lift up your head
And be yourself.

OLYMPICS

Look at the athletes all ready to go
Up in the mountains competing in the snow
All imagining the records they'll beat
Every one ready to compete.
Each competing in many different races
Each coming from many different places.
All setting records and going for gold
All very strong, healthy and bold.
In the end not every one will win
But in 1988 will try for gold again.

- Chris Meade, 78

BIRDS

Birds, figures in the sky.
Flying, hovering, gliding, soaring.
White as the Dove, black as the Crow.
Large as the Eagle, small as the Sparrow.
Hardly ever resting, they make their way through The bright glistening sky.

- Steve Fister, 75

I CANNOT WRITE A POEM

It's like I'm driving along in my car
Thinking I know
where I'm going.
Then I turn the corner and Hit a dead-end sign
And I have to turn around and start over again!

- Dana Wall, 84

Superman
Strong, gentle
Flying, landing, jumping,
Krypton, spacecraft, earth, powers
Reporting, driving, writing
Weak, helpful
Clark Kent

- Mike Petereit, 76

DEPARTMENT STORES

Department stores are crazy.
Departments are like zoos.
Pushing, shoving, grabbing,
falling,
Crashing, pounding, customers around.
Like the rest of the merchandise.

- Maggie Adao, 83

FAST LIGHTNING

I surveyed the track and its surroundings, then did a last minute check to see if my running shoes were firmly tied. My race was called and I crouched into position. My knees were weak and as the starter fired the gun, my heart leaped. With an amazing surge of power I took off, leaving the crowd far behind me. I felt the ground flying beneath my feet. Everything seemed to be at a standstill as I neared the finish. With every ounce of power I had, I threw myself at the finish. I stumbled, almost lost my balance, and barely managed to remain standing. It seemed like an eternity had gone by, but now the finish line was upon me. Everybody held their breath. I thrust forward into the finish line and time stopped. I was ecstatic!

- Lee-Ann Simpson, 86

WATER IS A VEHICLE

Water is a vehicle
On a long and winding highway.
The rapids move
Like a grand prix car, Running over rocks and Spinning around the curves.

Water is a vehicle,
Ripping, roaring, and rushing, tearing and thrashing
Through the obstacles
in its path.

Water is a vehicle
that never runs out of fuel.

- Ahilya Singh, 84

THE SEA

A river is a long highway, Curving and twisting
like a roller coaster upon a track.
Slowly leading its way to the sea
Growing larger as it goes on
And making room for others
Who want to pass
Until finally you come
To the vast open area
You have longed for
All your life.

- Bronwyn Hannahson, 84

AN OVERWHELMING EMPTINESS

Terry carefully climbed down the narrow, winding stairs.
Inhaling the damp, musty air, she only continued on in order to discover what would be awaiting her at the end.

The stairs built of solid rock, led her below the earth's surface and into an ancient dungeon. The dungeon belonged to one of the few historical castles still remaining high above the ground in Scotland.

About to reach the end of the sinking pathway, Terry was both excited and slightly daunted. The bare grey walls enclosed her in another place and time. They seemed to emphasize the barrier between herself and the outside world. She knew that if she were to scream, the sound would only rebound back to her own unprotected ears. Terry was completely alone and, if in need of help, she knew it would be absent.

Departing from the last step, Terry now felt a large emptiness envelop the room. Over the years, cob webs had invaded, securing themselves along ceilings and secluded corners. Mice scurried about and, catching sight of Terry, they escaped beyond her vision. It was as though they were frightened by their own shadows.

Terry could easily imagine the painful times spent within these dreadful cells. The anguish and sorrow seemed to linger in the air. Centuries of deep and aged secrets remained securely hidden from the people living in the reality of today. Torture, death, meaningless hours spent in the suffocating atmosphere.
All this "pain of yesterday" was merely left to the imaginations of today.

Terry did not imagine the uncontrollable urge to leave which led her back to those narrow winding stairs.

- Tanya Jeremic, 83

TORNADO

The tornado struck without warning. The clear blue sky quickly turned to a dusty gray. A harsh wind bitterly blew golden leaves onto the moist ground. The terrifying wind swept through the dense forest picking up anything in its path. Dust and crisp autumn leaves were swept up into the black sky. Enormous branches were ripped off trees and picked up by the wind.
The swirl was quickly approaching town. Horrified people stood astonished, wondering what would happen next. A shingled roof was ripped from a sturdy barn. Terrified animals quickly ran for shelter. The sun had now disappeared and was hidden somewhere in the overcast sky. When the bitter wind died down and strips of blue peeped through the clouds the people of the town knew that this terrifying experience was now over. That was certainly a day to remember.

- Lara Muller, 76

REMEMBRANCE DAY THOUGHTS

For all of those who fought for our freedom,
We pay respect with a moment of silence.
With nothing there to remind us of who they were,
Except the little flowers that we wear, picked for their colour red
To symbolize the many lives that were shed,
With poppies growing row by row,
Marking the graves of the soldiers dead
Who couldn't be here on this day.
So we remember them in a very special way,
By calling November 11th Remembrance Day.

- Slavica Ilic, 75

THE PERILS OF SCHOOL

Boy, do I hate homework!
I just can't stand it any more.
Day after day, night after night,
Homework is really a bore.

When I don't do my homework,
It's plain to see,
That my mark this term
Without doubt is a "D".

Penicils, Papers, Rulers, Pens,
Sometimes I wonder if there's really an end.
History, Science, French, Geography
No one knows what it's doing to me.

Walking to school each and every day,
Sometimes I think that we should get paid.
Walking through snow, sleet and rain,
Sometimes school is really a pain.
