Everybody's Talking

Big book: An unusual method was used to digitize a very large atlas dating from the 1600s. Because of its size, the book was propped up on platforms, reflectors were held up by workers to provide even light, and each page was photographed. The book in question is the Klencke Atlas, which is almost 6 feet tall and contains 41 maps. Once owned by King Charles II, the atlas is on display at the British Library in London, England.

Painting for skiers: Without realizing it, skiers all over the world may be familiar with the work of artist James Niehues of Loveland, Colorado. Niehues paints trail maps of ski resorts. To understand the geography of the area, he takes aerial photographs from a small plane or helicopter. He then gets to work in his studio, drawing initial sketches from his favourite photos.

Magnificent memory: A woman from Sweden doesn't believe in photographic memories. If someone has a good memory, she believes, it's because they train themselves to have one. Yaanja Wintersoul's ability is so exceptional that she was able to memorize all the details in a 328 page catalogue from IKEA in just one week.

Did You Know...

Desert statues: Not far from Cairo, Egypt is the White Desert, which is home to unique rock formations of many shapes and sizes. Rising from the sand, these desert statues were formed through erosion and sandstorms and constantly change shape.

Hut life: In Cape Royds, Antarctica, stands a hut that was erected by the explorer Ernest Shackleton and his crew in 1908. The conserved hut has a stove, a kettle, candles and cans of food still intact, as well as medicine bottles made of coloured glass.

Four kids: The leader of U2, the famous Irish rock band, did not always go by the name Bono. His birth name is Paul David Hewson. He and his wife Ali have four children: Jordan, Memphis Eve, Elijah Bob and John.

On the Lighter Side

A person seldom makes the same mistake twice. Generally, it's three times or more.

You load 16 tonnes and what do you get? A hernia.

Diplomacy: the art of letting someone have your way.

Grandchildren of any age can make their grandparents happy just by saying: "I'm hungry!"

Doctor: "The cheque you gave me for my bill came back."

Patient: "So did my arthritis."
